It is a Thing universally known, that all the great and arduous Affairs of the City of London, lie entirely on the Shoulders of a few worthy Members of the Half-Moon-Club, all Elections, Trusts, Charities, and all Matters relating to the City, being always previously adjusted, settled, and determined there; by which Means all the rest of the Citizens of London are very happily eased of any Part or Share of the Burden of Publick Business of any Kind or Nature whatever, they having nothing in the World to do, but only to come and give their Votes now and then, when they are directed to do so, which by the wise and excellent Management of the said Club is now almost reduced to mere Matter of Form, and by consequence the other Citizens are more at Leisure now to mind their own Concerns than in any Time before, which must needs be a great Advantage to them: In Consideration of which, we hear, that the Members of the said Club have come to a Resolution among themselves, That such of them as are Committee men or Select Vestry men shall defray all the Expences of the said Club out of the Trust and Charity-money that from time to time shall come to their Hands; and we hear further, that at the fullest Meeting of the said Club that ever was known, it was unanimously agreed, to give a Pair of New Shoes, Two New Shirts, and a Great Coat and Badge with the City Arms upon it, to that Illustrious Pattern as well of all Publick as Private Virtue, the Author of the Champion, for his Noble and Disinterested Labours in the Cause of Liberty, Virtue, and the Half-Moon-Club; or, as the Members thereof most modestly call themselves, the ity of London.
